Lonely Planet, Brendan Sainsbury, John Noble, Josephine Quintero, Daniel C Schechter : Lonely Planet Andalucia (Travel Guide) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Lonely Planet Andalucia (Travel Guide):

We have many of them in our bookcase from locations all over the world and have come to rely on them as our main resource for practical travel information.

However with the last few we have purchased we have noticed that their quality has been on the decline. For our most recent trip we purchased this guide along with the Rough Guide to Andalucia. The RG proved superior in every conceivable way, from the overall organization, to both the quality and quantity of the information. By the second day of the trip the LP guide had been relegated to the deep recesses of my bag. Everytime the RG failed me in some way i brought out the LP in hopes it could redeem itself. It never did.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Good itineraries and maps of sitesBy draganaGood itineraries and maps of sites; good guidance through basic must-see spots; but out-of date working hours/activity in general (Museo de Cadiz, flamenco house in Triana, Seville); prices of entering fees (e.g. Plaza de Toros in Ronda) and tapas prices also need some updating as well. Since this was 2012 edition, perhaps newer edition has improved on those point.2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. poorer content in Kindle versionBy Krzysztof Ka?u?nyI've compared it with a hard copy version and the Kindle one ocured to be poorer. There's nothing or very little written about some reaily important and attractive places. Also reading the maps is difficult - places to visit aren't clearly highlighted. Next time I'll try different series of travel guides.

About the AuthorHailing originally from London in England, Brendan left home in the mid-90s and never really went back. In between penning travel stories he has hitch-hiked across Africa, taught English in Thailand, dug latrines in Angola and worked as a tour guide in Spain, Morocco and Cuba. He finally came to rest in 2004 at White Rock, British Columbia, after marrying a Canadian doctor whom he had impressed with his Flamenco guitar-playing in Spain. Brendan speaks Spanish and is fascinated by Latin America. His main passions are music, Moorish architecture, being "on the road", and following Southampton football club. Recent writing credits include TNT Magazine, The Morning Star, Student Traveller and The Australian Newspaper.
